March 25, 2019 13 Min read timeWhat does it mean to live in a world in which history has rusted under the monstrous weight of the permanent now?Editor's Note: This essay appears in our Fall 2018 print issue Evil Empire.. In a 1989 essay, which he expanded into the 1992 book The End of History and the Last Man, Fukuyama prophesied that the fall of communism signaled “the end of history as such: that is, the end point of mankind’s ideological evolution and the universalization of Western liberal democracy as the final form of human government.. All history is the history of empire—a bid for control of that greatest expanse of territory, the past.

This thinking, in my opinion, created many of the economic and political problems we face today, especially the rise of China and globalism.. Seneca’s Pax Romana announced a history stilled by the glorious rise of Augustus, the “sun that never set” shone on the image of time frozen at the height of the British Empire—and the world spun madly on.. There is a quasi-religious overtone to all of this—everything in the past has been moving toward a telos, a predestined end.

I often bash Francis Fukuyama, largely because his “End of History” theory encapsulated all of the terrible thinking by our “intellectual elites” in the immediate post-Cold War era.. Feb 01, 1992 Francis Fukuyama is particularly worried that the satisfactions of living at the end of history will leave mankind so dull and complacent that his spiritual life will atrophy and he will find himself transformed into that flaccid creature, Nietzsche’s “last man,” described in Thus Spoke Zarathustra as “the most despicable man” who is “no longer able to despise himself.. In this battle, there is no room for neutral parties: every history and counter-history must fight and scrap and claw and spread and lodge itself in the world, lest it be forgotten or forcibly erased. Nearly thirty years ago, American political scientist Francis Fukuyama famously called the ball game once more.. Rather, it merely represents the thrashing of those parts of the world that are still mired “in history” as they are compelled down the inevitable path to joining the “posthistorical” world.. It did mean, however, that all boats were ultimately heading to the same shore; with no more serious contenders on the world stage, all things were trending toward a global order in which the marriage of market capitalism and liberal democracy would enjoy eternal dominance. The greatest act of empire, of course, is to declare the whole messy, brutal process finished, to climb to the top of the trash heap and trumpet one’s reign as the culmination of all history.. All history, in this sense, is the history of empire—a bid for control of that greatest expanse of territory, the past.. Among the prizes at stake in the endless war of politics is history itself The battle for power is always a battle to determine who gets remembered, how they will be recalled, where and in what forms their memories will be preserved.. The age of global neoliberalism, with a sort of egg wash of liberal democracy, stands as the inevitable endgame of “mankind’s ideological evolution,” the output that the entire Rube Goldberg machine of human history has always been grinding toward.. ” Of course, the “end of history” didn’t mean the end of military conflicts, social upheavals, or economic booms and busts.. Thus, in Fukuyama’s view, the endless roil of intra- and international conflicts that have continually punctured our world during the past three decades has nothing to do with any world-historical battle between competing social orders.
